

Unfold — Redesign Layout Plan

Synthesis of 00-current-state-audit.md + 01-competitor-research.md. For handoff to a developer (Claude Code) building in Squarespace. No code here — section-by-section content/layout intent only.

Site-wide decisions (apply everywhere)

1. New IA — 7 pages, not 5. Add two pages that don't exist today: 1:1 Coaching and Private Sessions, each a full landing page (pattern: Kim Kimball / Dr. Gerbi / Amy Schield — dedicated page per tier, competitor table row 1). Add a dedicated Experts page (currently only a 3-card teaser on Home). Final nav: Home · About · 1:1 Coaching · Private Sessions · Events · Experts · Corporate · Contact. If 7 items feels wide, group the three offers under an "Offers" dropdown — native Squarespace supports nav folders.
2. One CTA style, repeated often. Pick a single primary CTA label per audience ("Book a Free Consult" for 1:1/private, "Explore Events" for events, "Talk to Us" for corporate) and repeat it 4–6× down every long page, per Dr. Gerbi/Amy Schield (table row: CTA repetition). Unfold's Home today has exactly one clickable CTA for three tiers — this is the single highest-leverage global fix.
3. State a number everywhere an offer appears. Every tier gets a visible price or price range, even if it's "from $X" — Events is the only page doing this today. Squarespace-native (text/price on a summary block); no app needed.
4. Collapse "Ways to begin" and "Our pillars" into one framework. Home currently runs two different rule-of-three lists back to back (3 tiers, then 3 pillars). Keep the 3 tiers as the structural spine of the whole site; fold the pillar language in as supporting philosophy copy inside the About/founder story, not a second competing list on Home.
5. Corporate stays on-domain. Per Tingi Ko and Strong By Nature (table rows: on-domain B2B, individual/org split) — do not route to flowfor.nl as the primary path. Keep Flowfor as a credit/sub-brand mention, not the destination.

Home

Section	Contents	Why (cited pattern)	Layout
Hero	One headline ("Your body knows first"), a subhead naming the specific audience (career-identity loss, pregnancy, postpartum — borrow the precision of Kim Kimball's "matrescence, midlife, career change" list),	Audit finding: current hero has no CTA at all. Competitor row: single specific hero statement, 5/7 sites.	Full-bleed image/video left or center, headline+subhead+button stacked, native Squarespace hero section.

	one primary CTA button ("Book a Free Consult").
For You / For Your Organization split	Two side-by-side panels immediately under the hero: "For You" (1:1, Private Sessions, Events) and "For Your Organization" (Corporate), each 2–3 lines + its own CTA.	Direct model: Tingi Ko's individual/organization split at the top of Home. Fixes the audit gap that corporate is nav-only and under-cased.	2-column native layout section (stacks to 1 col on mobile automatically).
Your starting point	Keep existing reflective paragraph, but end it with a CTA instead of leaving it as a dead end.	Every strong competitor closes emotional copy with an action, not silence.	Single text block, centered, CTA button below.
Three tiers, as cards	Convert "Ways to begin" from plain text into 3 equal cards: 1:1 Coaching, Private Sessions, Group Events. Each card: 1-line description, "from $X", its own CTA linking to its own new page.	Audit gap #1 (tiers 1–2 have no page/CTA today). Competitor row: dedicated page per tier + price near offer.	Native 3-column card/gallery block, equal height, icon or photo per card.
Marquee "We grow by going inwards"	Keep or shorten to a thin 1-line divider — it's brand-mood only, not information; don't let it push key content further down the scroll.	No competitor in the set uses a pure mood-marquee this early in the page; it delays getting to the offer.	If kept, make it visually thin (one line, low height) rather than a full-height section.
Founder story teaser	2–3 sentences from the About page's burnout→matrescence story + founder photo + "Read Vic's story" link.	Audit gap: the strongest content on the site (About) is invisible on Home. Competitor row: founder story surfaced on Home, 3/7 (Tingi Ko, Dr. Gerbi, Kim Kimball).	Image + text 2-column, native section.
Testimonials, placed near offers (not batched)	Keep 2 existing quotes but consider moving one 1:1-relevant quote up next to the tier cards rather than isolating all proof at the bottom; add named attribution once available (currently anonymous role labels only).	Competitor row: proof-next-to-offer (Kim Kimball, Dr. Gerbi) beats a single undifferentiated block; avoid Strong By Nature's overwhelming 14-quote wall.	Quote blocks embedded near relevant card, or a compact 2-up carousel.

Trusted Practitioners (Experts teaser)	Keep the 3-card teaser, but add one sentence explaining the referral mechanism ("After your first session, we may recommend one of our trusted practitioners for specialized support") + "Meet the network →" linking to new Experts page.	Audit gap: referral model is never explained anywhere on the current site.	Native 3-card gallery, unchanged visual format, add link.
Get in touch (form)	Keep, but this can be lighter — a single-line CTA banner ("Ready to begin? Book a free consult") linking to the Contact page's fuller form, instead of duplicating the whole form on Home.	Reduces redundancy; matches the "one clear CTA at the end" pattern seen across all 7 competitors.	Native CTA banner section.
Footer	Keep newsletter signup + links; no change needed.	—	—

About

Largely keep as-is — this is the strongest page on the site (audit finding). Two additions:

- Move "Book a free session" CTA higher — currently it's the only action on the page; repeat it once more after the founder bio block, per the CTA-repetition pattern.
- Add a short "Credentials" bullet list (Aryu-Yoga training, systemic coaching certification, etc., however Vic wants to name them) near the founder photo — Amy Schield's and Dr. Gerbi's "meet your coach" credential bullets build fast trust and are currently absent (About only narrates the story, doesn't list qualifications explicitly).

Squarespace-native throughout — text + image sections, no custom code needed.

1:1 Coaching (new page)

Full landing page using the Amy Schield / Kim Kimball template (competitor row: "best template for a service-tier landing page"):

1. Hero — "1:1 Coaching & Access to Your Expert Network," one line naming who it's for, CTA.
2. What's included — replace the current placeholder ("xxxxxxx") with the 3 real stages already named in the site (Starting point scan → Tailored program → Regulating movement), each with 2–3 concrete bullets.
3. Investment — a stated price or range, ideally structured like Kim Kimball's model: a low-cost initial assessment session that credits toward the full program if booked within

N days. This directly reuses Unfold's own existing "every process begins with an initial assessment" language — it just needs a number and the credit mechanic made explicit.

4. Who this is for / Who this is not for — borrow Amy Schield's qualifier section directly: name who benefits (career-identity transition, burnout, pregnancy/postpartum) and clarify how this differs from therapy and from the referred expert-network sessions (this also solves the audit's "referral model is unexplained" gap — explain it here in plain terms: "If your assessment surfaces a need outside coaching, we'll connect you with one of our trusted practitioners").
5. How it works — numbered steps (Book → Assessment → Tailored sessions → Referral if needed).
6. Testimonial(s) specific to 1:1 clients.
7. FAQ — replace the current stock placeholder FAQ with real questions (how many sessions, what if I need a specialist, cancellation policy, etc.).
8. Final CTA banner.

Squarespace-native: all achievable with standard content blocks, an FAQ/accordion block, and a pricing/summary block. A payment-plan or credit-toward-purchase mechanic (Kim Kimball's "$150 refundable, credited if you book within 7 days") is a manual/booking-policy statement in copy, not something Squarespace enforces automatically — flag that the actual crediting has to be handled by the practitioner at checkout/invoicing, not by a native discount rule, unless using Squarespace Scheduling with manually-applied credit notes.

Private Movement & Breathing Sessions (new page)

Same template as 1:1 Coaching, adapted:

- Hero naming the specific format (movement + breath + Ayurveda-informed, nervous-system focus).
- What's included / session structure.
- Investment (price per session or package, e.g. single session vs. 4-pack).
- Who it's for.
- FAQ, testimonial, final CTA.

This page currently doesn't exist at all — it's the second flagship tier with zero dedicated presence today (audit gap #1).

Events

Mostly keep the existing Squarespace Events collection structure — it already works well (real dates, locations, pricing shown, per audit). Changes:

- Resolve the language inconsistency flagged in the audit (event copy mixes Spanish and English) — a content decision for the client, not a layout one; note it in notes.md as an open question rather than silently translating.
- Add a short intro block at the top explaining what group events are and linking back to the Home tier card, so Events doesn't feel disconnected from the rest of the offer ladder.

- Consider a "past events" or highlights section (photos from prior events) to build social proof for a page type that otherwise has none — none of the 7 competitors had a dedicated public events page to benchmark directly, so this is an Unfold-specific opportunity rather than a borrowed pattern.
-

Experts (new page)

Currently just a 3-card teaser on Home with no dedicated page or explanation of the referral mechanism (audit gap). New page:

1. Intro explaining the model in plain terms: 1:1 coaching includes an assessment; where appropriate, clients are referred to a trusted specialist in the network; this page introduces who they are.
2. Practitioner cards, expanded from the current 3 (photo, name, specialty) to include a 2–3 line bio per practitioner and what kind of client need they address (mirrors the existing tri-line format, just given more room and its own page).
3. Optional: a short "How referrals work" 3-step visual (Assessment → Recommendation → Direct booking with the expert) — clarifies whether Unfold facilitates the booking or simply refers, which the current site never states.
4. CTA back to 1:1 Coaching (since referrals originate from that assessment).

No competitor in the research set has this exact referral-network model, so this page is largely original to Unfold rather than a borrowed pattern — flagged as such rather than over-citing.

Corporate

Full restructure per the Tingi Ko / Strong By Nature model (table row: on-domain B2B, individual/org split — the single biggest structural change recommended in this plan):

1. Hero — own headline and framing (workplace wellbeing, not "Unfold leads to Flowfor" as the opening line — lead with the offer, not the sub-brand hand-off).
2. What we offer — workshops/talks, manager development, team sessions (mirrors Tingi Ko's "Explore: Talks and workshops / Manager development / Team facilitation" bullet list) — currently the Corporate page has almost no substance before sending visitors off-site.
3. Why Unfold — 2–3 lines connecting the same founder credibility (burnout recovery, nervous-system expertise) to a workplace context, reusing the About narrative rather than introducing "Flowfor" as an unexplained second brand.
4. Social proof — at least one corporate-relevant quote (currently the "Event participant" quote on Home is workplace-adjacent — "improving how we interact between each other" — and could be reused/expanded here).
5. Flowfor mention — keep as a small credibility note ("delivered in partnership with Flowfor" or similar, client's call) rather than the entire page's destination — decide with the client whether Flowfor is being folded into Unfold's brand or kept as a named partner; that's a positioning question outside this layout plan's scope, but the page as currently built (one paragraph + immediate exit link) shouldn't ship as-is either way.

6. Contact form specific to corporate inquiries (can reuse the existing form pattern with a corporate-specific "interest in" default).

Squarespace-native throughout. If the client ultimately wants Corporate to stay a fully separate site/domain (a valid business decision — sub-brands are common), the minimum fix is still to make the on-site Corporate page a real one-page pitch (per Strong By Nature's "Corporate Solutions" page) before the external link, rather than a single paragraph.

Contact

Keep current structure (headline, 4 supporting bullets, form) — it's reasonably solid. One addition:

- Add a real scheduling embed (Squarespace Scheduling / Acuity block) so "Book a Free Consultation" becomes an instant calendar booking rather than a manual form-and-wait-for-reply, matching the frictionless booking flow every competitor in the research set uses ("Schedule a Discovery Call," "Book a Call," etc. all resolve to instant scheduling on their sites, not a contact form).

Flag: this is the one clear "not native by default" item. Squarespace Scheduling is a native Squarespace product (own subscription tier) and embeds cleanly — recommend it over a third-party embed if the client is open to the added cost; if not, a well-labeled contact form remains acceptable but should say "we'll reply within X hours" to offset the loss of instant confirmation.

Explicit Squarespace-capability flags (summary)

Item	Native Squarespace ?	Note
Multi-column cards, hero sections, FAQ/accordion blocks, image+text layouts	✓ Yes	All layouts above use standard Fluid Engine sections.
Nav dropdown/folder for grouping "Offers"	✓ Yes	Standard nav folder feature.
Pricing/testimonial/summary blocks	✓ Yes	Native content blocks.
Instant calendar booking (Contact page)	✓ Yes, via Squarespace Scheduling	Paid add-on tier — confirm client's plan includes it, or use a supported third-party embed (Calendly/Acuity) if not.

"Credit this payment toward your next purchase" mechanic (1:1 entry offer)	⚠ Manual only	Not a native discount-automation feature; must be handled as a stated policy + manual invoice/credit by the practitioner, not enforced by Squarespace commerce rules.
Video testimonials	✅ Yes	Native video embed block; just needs the client to record clients.
Two-audience (individual/org) homepage split with independent CTAs	✅ Yes	Standard 2-column section — no app needed.

Priority order for build (suggested)

1. Home restructure (highest-traffic page, fixes the most audit gaps at once)
2. 1:1 Coaching page (flagship tier, currently unbuilt/placeholder — most urgent content gap)
3. Private Sessions page (second flagship tier, currently doesn't exist)
4. Corporate page restructure (biggest structural deviation from competitor best practice)
5. Experts page (new, lower urgency — supports the 1:1 referral story once that page exists)
6. About tweaks, Contact scheduling embed, Events polish (smaller, can run in parallel)